They told you what you should be,
before they knew your name.
Gave you a hundred little labels,
tried to put you in a frame.

They whispered in the hallways,
they stared when you walked by,
made you feel like loving someone was something you should hide.

But you kept a little fire,
somewhere deep inside your heart.
You knew there had to be a place where you could just be who you are.

And then you met him.
And suddenly the road
didn't feel so long.
Two hearts.
One home.
And you knew.

Hey, Adol!
Look at you now.
You found the man
who makes you laugh out loud.

Hey, Adol!
Look at you shine.
After all those years
of being told to stay inside the lines.

Now you're dancing in the kitchen,
holding his hand in the street.
You don't need their permission.
You found where you belong.
You found your other half.
You found your love.
And look at you now.

There were words you couldn't say,
there were doors you couldn't open,
there were people who believed that love came with conditions.

But love was never asking for somebody else's rules.
It was two men choosing each other,
and making something beautiful.

A wedding ring.
A shared address.
A thousand ordinary days.

Coffee in the morning,
falling asleep the same way.
And maybe that's the miracle:
Nothing extraordinary.
Just two people
finally free
to live an ordinary life.

And all those years
they told you who to be...
Now you wake up
next to someone who loves you exactly as you are.

Hey, Adol!
Look at you now.
You found the man
who makes you laugh out loud.

Hey, Adol!
Look at you shine.
After all those years
of being told to stay inside the lines.

Now you're dancing in the kitchen,
holding his hand in the street.
You don't need their permission.
You found where you belong.
You found your other half.
You found your love.

And look at you now.

Let them talk.
Let them stare.
Let them keep their little labels.

You don't have to carry
what they put on you.
Take them off.
Leave them there.

You've got somewhere else to be.
You've got a hand to hold.
You've got a life to live.
You've got love.

Hey, Adol!
Look at you now!
Two men laughing
with the whole world somehow.

Hey, Adol!
Look at that smile!
You walked a thousand miles
just to find this life.

No more hiding in the shadows,
no more asking if it's right.

This is your life.
This is your love.
This is your home.
And it's beautiful.

Hey, Adol!
Look at you now.
After everything…
look at you now.